ORDER GRANTING SUMMARY JUDGMENT AGAINST TRUSTEES OF CIRCUIT CITY AND RADIOSHACK<sup>1</sup>

Re: Dkt. No. 2346

INTRODUCTION

Circuit City and RadioShack were national retailers of consumer electronics until they declared bankruptcy in 2008 and 2015, respectively. See Circuit City Second Am. Compl. [Dkt. No. 2158], at ¶¶ 4, 10; RadioShack Second Am. Compl. [Dkt. No. 2159], at ¶¶ 4, 10. Their respective bankruptcy trustees<sup>2</sup> each allege an industry-wide anticompetitive conspiracy to fix, raise, stabilize, and maintain the prices of optical disc drives (“ODDs”) from 2004 to 2010 and bring suit for compensatory damages under the Sherman Act. After the close of fact and expert discovery, Defendants<sup>3</sup> moved for summary judgment, challenging the sufficiency of the evidence of causation of harm to Circuit City and RadioShack, as well as to their claims involving products

<sup>2</sup> While the trustees bring the action, for purposes of this Order, the parties will be referred to as Circuit City and RadioShack.

<sup>3</sup> The moving defendants still remaining are Toshiba Corp.; Toshiba America Information Systems, Inc.; Toshiba Samsung Storage Technology Corp.; Toshiba Samsung Storage Technology Korea Corp.; Samsung Electronics Co., Ltd.; and Samsung Electronics America, Inc.

1 incorporating ODDs and “Other Products,” such as recording devices and gaming consoles.
2 Because Circuit City and RadioShack have not demonstrated a genuine issue of material fact as to 3 the existence of a conspiracy resulting in harm to them, Defendants’ motion for summary 4 judgment is granted.

5 LEGAL STANDARD

6 Summary judgment is proper where the pleadings, discovery, and affidavits demonstrate 7 that there is “no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a 8 matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). Material facts are those which may affect the outcome of 9 the case. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986). A dispute as to a material 10 fact is genuine if there is sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to return a verdict for the 11 nonmoving party. Id.

12 The party moving for summary judgment bears the initial burden of identifying those 13 portions of the pleadings, discovery, and affidavits which demonstrate the absence of a genuine 14 issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323 (1986). Where the moving 15 party will have the burden of proof on an issue at trial, it must affirmatively demonstrate that no 16 reasonable trier of fact could find other than for the moving party. In contrast, on an issue for 17 which the opposing party will have the burden of proof at trial, the moving party need only point 18 out “that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party’s case.” Id. at 325.

19 Once the moving party meets its initial burden, the nonmoving party must go beyond the 20 pleadings and, by its own affidavits or discovery, set forth specific facts showing that there is a 21 genuine issue for trial. The court is only concerned with disputes over material facts. “Factual 22 disputes that are irrelevant or unnecessary will not be counted.” Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. It is 23 not the task of the court to scour the record in search of a genuine issue of triable fact. Keenan v.
24 Allan, 91 F.3d 1275, 1279 (9th Cir.1996). The nonmoving party has the burden of identifying, 25 with reasonable particularity, the evidence that precludes summary judgment. Id. If the 26 nonmoving party fails to make this showing, “the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a 27 matter of law.” Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322.

DISCUSSION

I. Sufficiency of the Evidence of Harm to Circuit City and RadioShack Caused by the Conspiracy

A. Claims Under the Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act prohibits “every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . .” 15 U.S.C. § 1. Under the rule of reason, the court tests the legality of a restraint by asking whether it “is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.” Gorlick Distrib. Ctrs., LLC v. Car Sound Exhaust Syst., Inc., 723 F.3d 1019, 1024 (9th Cir. 2014). In order to establish a claim under Section 1, plaintiffs must demonstrate “(1) the parties to the agreement intend to harm or restrain competition, (2) the agreement actually injures competition and (3) the restraint is unreasonable as determined by balancing the restraint and any justifications or procompetitive effects of the restraint.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). “

When concerted price-fixing is alleged under the Sherman Act, plaintiffs bear the burden of presenting sufficient evidence to prove that an agreement to fix prices existed. See, e.g., In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d 1090, 1093 (9th Cir. 1999); Sun Microsystems Inc. v. Hynix Semiconductor Inc., 622 F. Supp. 2d 890, 896 (N.D. Cal. 2009). To survive summary judgment, plaintiffs must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendants entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused plaintiff to suffer a cognizable injury. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587 (1986). Plaintiffs can establish a genuine issue of material fact by producing either direct evidence of a defendant’s price-fixing conduct or circumstantial evidence from which a reasonable fact finder could conclude the same. In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d at 1093; see also Sun Microsystems, 622 F. Supp. 2d at 896 (citing Movie 1 & 2 v. United Artists Commc'ns, 909 F.2d 1245, 1251–52 (9th Cir. 1990); United States v. Gen. Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 142–43, (1966)).

Direct evidence of a conspiracy “must be evidence that is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted.” Cty. of Tuolumne v. Sonora

1 Cnty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1155 (9th Cir. 2001). In the absence of direct evidence, plaintiffs 2 “must present evidence from which an inference of conspiracy is more probable than an inference
3 of independent action.” Wilcox v. First Interstate Bank of Oregon, N.A., 815 F.2d 522, 525 (9th
4 Cir. 1987). The Ninth Circuit “has outlined a two-part test to be applied whenever a plaintiff rests
5 its case entirely on circumstantial evidence.” In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d at 1094. “First, the 6 defendant can ‘rebut an allegation of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for 7 its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice.’ The burden then shifts back to the 8 plaintiff to provide specific evidence tending to show that defendant was not engaging in 9 permissible competitive behavior.” Id. (internal citations omitted); see also In re Tableware
10 Antitrust Litig., 484 F. Supp. 2d 1059, 1972 (9th Cir. 2007).

11 B. Evidence of Causation of Harm

12 Defendants move for summary judgment on the grounds that Circuit City and RadioShack 13 cannot show that the alleged conspiracy caused them any cognizable injury. See Matsushita Elec.
14 Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-86 (1986). Defendants argue that no
15 evidence exists allowing a reasonable jury to conclude that ODD prices charged to Circuit City
16 and RadioShack were related to those charged to other OEMs. Circuit City and RadioShack do 17 not dispute their inability to present evidence that they were specifically targeted by the 18 conspiracy, and in fact, their liability expert, Dr. John Hayes, admitted at deposition that he did not 19 identify a single communication among Defendants discussing either Circuit City or RadioShack.
20 See Gelott Decl. [Dkt. No. 2346-8] Ex. 7, at 35:11–36:7; Opp. [Dkt. No. 2462] at 20–21.
21 Nonetheless, they contend that evidence of targeting is not required by the antitrust laws, and 22 instead, largely rely on expert testimony to establish causation of their injuries.

23 They present the testimony of two damages experts, Dr. James McClave and Dr. Alan 24 Frankel. Dr. McClave’s analysis opines on the amount, if any, by which prices of ODDs were 25 elevated by the conspiracy, using defendants’ transactional data in a multiple regression analysis 26 to compare prices during the relevant time period to competitive prices during a time unaffected
27 by the conspiracy as a benchmark. McClave Decl. [Dkt. No. 2466] at ¶¶ 1, 4–5. His analysis 28 ultimately calculated an estimated overcharge of 13.5%, and he concluded that “it is reasonable

1 and appropriate to apply this 13.5% overcharge number to all drives at issue in this case.” Id. ¶ 7.
2 Relying on Dr. McClave’s 13.5% overcharge percentage, Dr. Frankel calculates the amount of 3 overcharges on ODD products attributable to the conspiracy, and provides overcharge subtotals
4 for each product category. Frankel Decl. [Dkt. No. 2467] at ¶ 1.

5 Circuit City and RadioShack correctly conclude that Dr. McClave and Dr. Frankel’s
6 testimony is admissible. This does not equate, however, to evidence of causation of harm. Circuit
7 City and RadioShack jumble evidence of damages with evidence of causation, but their burden
8 remains to proffer evidence as to both of those elements separately. See, e.g., Catlin v. Wa.
9 Energy Co., 791 F.2d 1343, 1347–48 (9th Cir. 1986) (noting that even though plaintiff showed 10 proof of antitrust injury, “[n]o causal connection to [defendant’s] conduct was demonstrated”); 11 Oregon Laborers-Emp’rs Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris Inc., 185 F.3d 957, 963
12 (9th Cir. 1999) (“A direct relationship between the injury and the alleged wrongdoing, although 13 not the sole requirement of RICO and antitrust proximate causation, has been one of its central 14 elements.”) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 15 F.2d 802, 808 (9th Cir. 1988) (noting plaintiffs’ failure to “make a showing sufficient to establish 16 the amount, causation, or fact of damages”). Dr. McClave and Dr. Frankel, both as damages
17 experts, do not opine on causation of harm, or present a theory of causation. Instead, Dr. McClave 18 appears to assume that a conspiracy existed, and then calculates overcharge on products during the 19 affected period. Neither he nor Dr. Frankel explain any theory as to how the conspiracy would 20 have affected customers other than those specifically targeted, let alone present any evidence that 21 this actually occurred. Given Circuit City and RadioShack’s failure to proffer any evidence as to 22 causation, they fail to raise a genuine issue of material fact, and Defendants’ motion for summary 23 judgment against them must be granted.

24 II. Claims Based on Purchases of Products Incorporating ODDs, or “Other 25 Products”

26 Defendants also argue that they are entitled to summary judgment with respect to claims 27 based on purchases of other products incorporating ODDs, including computers, as well as “Other 28 Products,” such as recording devices or gaming consoles, manufactured by Defendants. While the

1 issue need not be reached in light of the conclusion above, it is worth noting that Circuit City and 2 RadioShack appear to misunderstand their burden of proof at summary judgment. Defendants 3 have, in their opening brief, successfully shown an “absence of evidence to support the 4 nonmoving party’s case.” Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. at 325. Circuit City and RadioShack 5 respond insisting Defendants fail to “cit[e] a shred of testimony from any economic experts of 6 their own,” and that Defendants’ argument must fail because of Circuit City and RadioShack’s 7 “unchallenged expert evidence.” Opp. [Dkt. No. 2462] at 22–23. It is not, however, Defendants’ 8 obligation to offer a rebuttal expert at summary judgment, but only to demonstrate the lack of a 9 genuine issue of material fact. Nor can Circuit City and RadioShack fill their evidentiary void
10 with what they call “expert evidence.” While expert testimony is useful to interpreting record 11 evidence, it cannot stand in its place. See Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco 12 Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 242 (1993) (“When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to 13 validate it in the eyes of the law, . . . it cannot support a jury’s verdict. Expert testimony is useful 14 as a guide to interpreting market facts, but it is not a substitute for them.”) (citation omitted).

15 Here, Circuit City and RadioShack do not advance sufficient evidence to proceed with 16 their claims based on purchases incorporating ODDs or “Other Products.” While their experts, Dr.
17 Hayes and Dr. Frankel, show plausible theories as to how vertically integrated defendants could 18 benefit from a conspiracy to charge supra-competitive rates with respect to products incorporating 19 ODDs, these plaintiffs offer no underlying evidence showing that this actually occurred in reality.
20 Indeed, Dr. Hayes admitted as much at deposition. See Gelott Decl. [Dkt. No. 2346-8] Ex. 7, at 21 81:2–84:5. With respect to “Other Products,” Defendants similarly point to various evidence 22 tending to show that the optical disc technology in these “Other Products” is not interchangeable
23 with the ODDs at issue in this litigation. While Dr. Fontecchio provides a contradictory opinion, 24 again it is not a substitute for concrete evidence showing that his opinion is in fact based in reality.
25 Moreover, at deposition, he conceded that more often than not, the majority of ODDs he reviewed 26 did not contain interchangeable optical disc technology. See Gelott Decl. [Dkt. No. 2346-4] Ex. 3, 27 at 37:24–38:9. In fact, he found only a single drive that was arguably interchangeable. Id. at 28 97:11–98:16. Given the vast amount of damages that Circuit City and RadioShack attribute to

1 “Other Products,”—nearly $75 million—this lone example is insufficient to raise a genuine issue
2 of material fact. Without the necessary evidence underpinning their theories, Circuit City and 3 RadioShack cannot show a genuine issue of material fact as to products incorporating ODDs or 4 “Other Products,” and thus cannot survive summary judgment.

5 CONCLUSION

6 For the reasons stated above, Defendants’ Motion for Summary Judgment against the 7 trustees of Circuit City and Radio Shack is granted.

8 IT IS SO ORDERED.
