IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

JAMES PORATH, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated,

No. C 18-03091 WHA

Plaintiffs,

v.

LOGITECH, INC.,

Defendant.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION AND TO STAY THE ACTION

To protect absent class members and to assist counsel in understanding the factors the Court considers in evaluating proposed class settlements, the undersigned judge has long provided guidance to both sides at the outset of any proposed class action. The guidance has been in the form of an order entitled “Notice and Order Re Putative Class Actions and Factors To Be Evaluated For Any Proposed Class Settlement.” No one has ever complained about it — until now. Defendant Logitech, Inc. objects to a requirement regulating the timing of settlement discussions of class-wide claims, contending it violates its First Amendment rights. This order disagrees with Logitech and explains why the provision in question is in the best interest of absent class members and is constitutional.

Plaintiff James Porath filed this putative class action in May 2018, alleging that Logitech falsely and deceptively advertised its Z200 speakers as containing four drivers when in fact two of those drivers did not independently produce sound and were parasitic speakers (Dkt. No. 1 at 4–5, 15–25). In June 2018, the usual order issued describing the factors for evaluating any class action settlement and prohibiting the parties from discussing any settlement

1 of class claims prior to class certification. That prohibition was qualified by the further 2 statement that if “counsel believe settlement discussions should precede a class certification, a 3 motion for appointment of interim class counsel must first be made” (Dkt. No. 16). (The order 4 dealt only with class settlements and did not bar counsel from discussing settlement of 5 plaintiff’s individual claim.)

6 In August 2018, counsel moved to appoint interim lead plaintiff and lead counsel under 7 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(g) (Dkt. No. 25). The parties stipulated to four reasons why 8 they believed pre-class certification settlement discussions might have been appropriate at that 9 moment: (1) Logitech agreed not to seek a “discount” based on the potential risk that the 10 putative class would not be certified; (2) Logitech had already begun revising the advertising at 11 issue; (3) Logitech was prepared “with respect to purchases of the Z200 speakers to make all 12 such consumers whole” (separately, in a case management statement, defendant further 13 specified: “whole with respect to any damages that may have been caused by the challenged 14 advertising”); and (4) the parties were prepared to engage in reasonable and appropriate 15 discovery to develop the factual record necessary to resolve the case (Dkt. No. 23, 24). After 16 considering the arguments from the parties’ motion and at the initial case management 17 conference, the motion to appoint interim counsel was denied.

18 Logitech then petitioned our court of appeals in October 2018 for a writ of mandamus.
19 A motion to stay the action pending resolution by our court of appeals followed much later 20 (Dkt. No. 33). Before this Court, however, could rule on the stay request, our court of appeals 21 denied the petition without prejudice “to re-raising the . . . constitutional questions presented in 22 this petition . . . in this court after presentation to the district court in the first instance.” Order, 23 Logitech, Inc. v. United States District Court for the Northern District of California, San 24 Francisco, No. 18-72732 (9th Cir. Dec. 24, 2018). The motion to stay was then denied as moot, 25 but “without prejudice to a fresh motion as contemplated by the court of appeals” (Dkt. No. 35).

26 Logitech now moves for leave to file a motion for reconsideration of the orders issued 27 last June (prohibiting the parties from discussing any class-wide settlement until after the Court 28 determines which claims deserve class treatment or until an appointment of interim counsel

1 under Rule 23) and last August (denying the motion for appointment of interim class counsel)
2 and to stay the action (Dkt. No. 38). Plaintiff's counsel take no position (Dkt. No. 39). No 3 hearing having been requested, this order follows.

4 Logitech's motion is DENIED.

5 The basic problem concerns the protection of absent class members. For the orderly 6 management of putative class actions and for the protection of absent class members, the Court 7 directs the parties not to discuss class-wide settlements until we determine what claims are 8 suitable for class treatment under Rule 23. Thereafter, of course, it becomes the duty of counsel 9 to consider settlement on a class-wide basis — but only of those certified claims. This avoids 10 the awkward situation in which counsel waste time on a proposed settlement of issues that 11 should not be litigated or settled on a class-wide basis. And, it avoids the creation of an 12 artificial ceiling for the value of a case before we determine which issues deserve class 13 treatment. It also avoids overbroad releases by absent class members of claims that should not 14 be released.

15 As importantly, it protects the absent class members from inappropriately discounted
16 settlements. Once a claim is certified for class treatment, everyone agrees that a class 17 settlement may be discounted based on the merits of the claim. On the other hand, the recovery 18 by absent class members should not be further discounted by the risk that a claim will not 19 eventually be certified for class treatment. This view is supported by Professor Howard 20 Erichson. See, e.g., Howard M. Erichson, The Problem of Settlement Class Actions, 82 WASH.
21 U. L. REV. 951 (2014); Howard M. Erichson, Beware The Settlement Class Action, DAILY
22 JOURNAL, Nov. 24, 2014.

23 For example, counsel for plaintiff may fear that particular claims will not be certified for 24 class treatment due to lack of a class-wide method of proof. Counsel, therefore, might be 25 tempted to accept a lowball offer to salvage a class recovery. Other similar Rule 23 hurdles 26 concern standing or adequacy of representation. These might also lead to a further discount, 27 further reducing recovery to absent class members. Postponing class settlement discussion until 28

1 after we determine which claims are class-worthy prevents these concerns from reducing a class 2 recovery.

3 With respect to the individual claim of a plaintiff, the procedure in question permits any 4 discussion at any time. As to absent class members, however, plaintiff's counsel have no
5 authority to negotiate for the absent class members until a standard appointment under Rule 6 23(g)(1) or an appointment as "interim counsel" under Rule 23(g)(3). It is in the best interest of 7 absent class members to first work through the protections of Rule 23 to define what claims, if 8 any, are suitable for class treatment, what specific classes and subclasses, if any, are viable, and 9 whether or not plaintiff and his counsel are adequate to represent absent class members. These 10 should be vetted before discussions take place so the rights of the absent class members won't 11 be compromised on problems other than the merits.

12 The guidelines further state that a settlement should be negotiated only after adequate 13 and reasonable investigation and discovery by class counsel. This requirement serves the due 14 diligence obligation of class counsel, who owe a fiduciary duty to the class to develop the facts 15 well enough to negotiate a good settlement. Our court of appeals emphasized the "rigorous 16 analysis" required by the district court in class action determinations and the role discovery 17 plays in this analysis in recently invalidating a local rule that required moving for class 18 certification within ninety days of filing the complaint. Such rigorous analysis "may require 19 discovery" and take more than ninety days. ABS Entertainment, Inc. v. CBS Corporation, 908 20 F.3d 405, 427 (9th Cir. 2018) (quoting Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 350–51 21 (2011)).

22 In this same vein, one of the factors the Court "must consider" in appointing interim 23 class counsel and class counsel is "the work counsel has done in identifying or investigating 24 potential claims in the action." Rule 23(g)(1)(A)(i). Here, at the time of the original motion for 25 appointment of interim counsel, plaintiff's counsel said they would do some homework, but 26 they didn't say that they had yet done it. That remains true today.

27 The guidelines in question have long recognized that pre-certification settlement 28 discussions are sometimes warranted. The guidelines invite counsel to move to be appointed as 1 “interim counsel” for precisely this purpose. As stated, Rule 23(g)(3) specifically calls out 2 appointment of “interim counsel.” One circumstance where such a motion would likely be 3 granted is where the defendant has dwindling resources such that a prompt settlement is 4 necessary to recover anything at all, even when little discovery has been possible.

5 When counsel here moved for the appointment of interim counsel, however, no showing 6 of dire circumstances was made. No discovery had been conducted (Dkt. No. 23 at 4). Even 7 though defendant’s counsel vaguely stated that Logitech was prepared to make all purchasers 8 “whole with respect to any damages that may have been caused by the challenged advertising,” 9 this clever wording offered little of substance, not even conceding that there had been “any” 10 damages (Dkt. No. 23 at 6). Making the class “whole” could have meant a number of 11 unacceptable scenarios, such as a mere coupon that would’ve burdened class members with a 12 trip to a distant service center, or a cash refund only to those willing to fill out a laborious claim 13 form. The record was therefore too conclusory, and thus, did not warrant such an appointment.
14 Even now, Logitech’s motion for reconsideration states nothing new.

15 Whether or not to appoint interim counsel is an issue of discretion for the district court.
16 Logitech merely disagrees with the exercise of discretion by the district judge in this case. It is 17 true that amendments to Rule 23 contemplate that a proposed settlement may be presented 18 before a class has been certified. But, at the risk of repetition, so do the guidelines in question.
19 Both turn on the interim counsel device.

20 With respect to free speech, the viewpoint neutral guidelines in question allow for plenty 21 of settlement discussion and merely regulate the time, place, and manner of these discussions.
22 The only restraint is on talking about a class-wide settlement before someone is authorized 23 under Rule 23 to negotiate on behalf of a class — a sensible precaution for the protection of 24 absent class members.

25 Full settlement discussions at any time with respect to the individual claim are 26 permitted. Full settlement discussions as to class claims are permitted once those class claims 27 are identified or after interim counsel is appointed. No permanent or overly broad ban on 28 speech exists. To the extent a limited restriction exists, the interests are overwhelmingly

1 outweighed by the interest of the Court in effectuating orderly case management and the 2 interests of the absent class members whose rights are also at risk. See, e.g., U.S. v. Richey, 924
 3 F.2d 857, 859 (9th Cir. 1991); United States v. Gurney, 558 F.2d 1202, 1210 (5th Cir. 1977).
 4 Counsel has no specific First Amendment right to try to extract a class-wide release from a 5 lawyer who has no authority to act for a class (meaning, someone who has not yet been certified 6 as class counsel or appointed as interim counsel).

7 No one has a First Amendment right to petition the government (including the courts) on 8 behalf of a class and to impose a release onto a class until a proper representative has been 9 appointed to look out for the class. It is true that some judges don't insist on such an 10 appointment beforehand, but that is a matter of discretion, not a matter of right by the litigants.
 11 Logitech cites no case-law to the contrary.

12 No new facts have been shown to warrant reconsideration of either prior order. The 13 motion for leave to file a motion for reconsideration of both the orders issued last June and 14 August is DENIED. As provided in the original case management order, the motion for class 15 certification remains due on February 7 to be heard on a 49-day track. All other deadlines 16 remain in effect.

17 The class certification motion will be decided one way or the other long before any 18 extraordinary writ petition could be determined by our court of appeals, so the motion to stay is 19 DENIED on that ground (as well as on the merits).

20
21 IT IS SO ORDERED.
